Sorry, but I got some 9-11 tactical clothing. Smells like kerosene though, and weeps about events even 4 years after it.....

Why by 5.11 when you can buy better made , better quality and cheaper tactical clothing from China, Mexico, Egypt, Malta, Britain. I compared the 511 tac vest with a snowbee and a regatta vest and both were better finished in better fabrics, though they did not have purpose designed holtser pockets. Basically 511 is kit for Gucci warriors, In the US there are two other companies who make similar stuff much better than 911 and still cheaper, cant remember the companies but Cabelas used to stock it,

I have not seen better. If you have web sites, post them. But while 5.11 has become fashionable , it is damned good gear. At least as tough as military uniforms. And a lot less hot than police uniforms.

<https://store.511tactical.com/index.asp> Anyone own 5.11 tactical clothing? This stuff is neat. If you have not seen it, most of the civilians in Iraq are wearing it. Light weight, rugged, lots of pockets. Not as military as BDU or DCU uniforms. Originally for rock climbers. Then some FBI agents, who were rock climbers, started wearing them at the academy. Now all agents are issued them (nice built in pockets for knee pads). Blackwater, Dyncorps and other private military companies are equipping their folks with them. DOD civilians are wearing them. Even State Department weenies are into them. If I'm EVER caught wearing anything remotely resembling anything that might be considered tactical anything, you have my permission to put a bullet right through my head. In fact, I'd hope you would. Jeesh...

So what do you prefer? Especially for rugged wear? I do a fair amount of rugged work. I wear jeans, a cotton/poly blend shirt, lace-up boots or loafers (I broke a foot a while back and never went to the doc, so I need comfortable shoes whenever possible), some sort of hat to keep the sun out of my eyes (I'm partial to those white plastic sun helmets, but sometimes I wear a baseball-style cap) if I'm going to be spending a lot of time out in the sun. I would rather be shot than be caught wearing tactical clothing. I don't own any tactical clothing; I would never buy any tactical clothing; and I think people who do are ridiculous, or some sort of militia wannabes.

I would rather be shot than be caught wearing tactical clothing. I don't own any tactical clothing; I would never buy any tactical clothing; and I think people who do are ridiculous, or some sort of militia wannabes. Or people who read the product reviews and learn that military boots are rated as a good 'value for the money' as hiking boots? There are a few 'tactical' products that I simply regard as the best product for the task and use them in my civilian life (military issue e-tool, poncho liner, duffel bag, Air Force flight bag, thermal underwear, etc.). The commander in the field is always right and the rear echelon is wrong, unless proved otherwise. General Colin Powell

Treat them decent, they'll last three years or so. Pretty good value. If I have to wear my funeral suit, I just give my boots the mighty polish, they're fine with it. John

Daily Tactical clothing for me is bib overalls, or decent jeans and a shirt with button down pockets. I do have a couple pair of Dockers, with the leg pockets, but they are common enough in the techie crowd to be not considered out of line. On the other hand...for camoflaugue purposes at the appropriate time, I keep a current set of the same bdus worn by most US military groups, woodland, day desert, digital, etc. Based on the same camo goals that I also pick up the occasional shirt from the Goodwill from places like the power company, UPS, Dominos, etc. That sort of camo is indeed tactical..... you dont like 501 tight or i like them to keep me guessin 2 sizes bigger than should be Depends on the area you live in. Where Robert and I live, but 200 miles apart..Wrangler cowboy cut slim fits are sorta a common uniform of the working class. And they last well. 501s are what the kids wear..yuppie kids.
