We've played against the ROTC guys a couple times, including some of the Army Rangers who are their advisors or what not. They stink. Bad. Really, I ust don't think army training jives with paintball. In the army, you're given two clips of 20 and you're expected Nothing but the truth there. As a student at Auburn, I played against Marine NROTC

cadets from the school as well as Army Rangers from Fort Benning on a number of occasions. The only ones that were ever any good were those that had played on numerous occasions in the past. What the military teaches you and what you learn on a paintball field aren't remotely synonymous. Regards, Goom

They stink. Bad. Really, I just don't think army training jives with paintball. In the army, you're given two clips of 20 and you're expected to make your shots count, and those bullets do a lot of things you can't do with a paintball. On the other hand, we run around with hoppers of 200 plus another 500 rounds on our back (or more), spraying cover fire everywhere. Drop some paint on the bunker of someone with army training and they just do NOT get up. Just my two cents. I use it as a point whenever someone tries to tell me paintball turns kids into soldiers. You should tell that to my town's town commission... our youth commission is trying to get the town to buy paint guns that you could use for free and only buy the paint yourself, but doesn't paintball turn kids into soldiers? Urghhhh!

Don't believe any of the mis-information that these guns have a limited range, they run off of CO2. Not all AirSoft guns run off CO2, some are some type of Hop up system Airsoft uses I believe. | Mike Deo Taylor | PGP #Somethingorother | Hammer Plus #Couldntfindit | _____

Anyone have any experience with these guns shooting paint? Yes. Don't do it; the bb's break very easily and liquid is a big no-no inside an AEG. The range and accuracy suffers, too. They were made for solid pellets. Dave <http://www.cimmerians.com>
